

Breach of road rules

July 2013

What do these words mean?

Words that are highlighted in bold are explained in our What do these words mean? fact sheet.

What are the 'road rules'?

The road rules come from the Road Safety Road Rules 2009. There are over 200 rules, and are for Victorian drivers and road users to follow. If the police detect that you breached one of these rules, the police can charge you with an offence.

The exact nature of the offence can relate to rules about:

- vehicle registration
- road-worthiness
- licences
- bicycles
- L-plates and P-plates.

Whether you are guilty of breaching a road rule depends on the exact facts and circumstances of your case. Look at the 'Details of the charge' in your charge sheet to see what the police officer wrote about your offence. The magistrate refers to this in the courtroom.

What can I do today?

Plead guilty

If you agree that you did break the law, tell the court staff that you are pleading guilty. Go into the courtroom. The police prosecutor reads out the statement of alleged facts. The magistrate finds you guilty and gives you a penalty.

If you plead guilty the magistrate treats your plea as a sign that you are co-operating and may give you a less severe penalty.

See our Pleading guilty fact sheet to help you to work out what to say to the magistrate.

Plead not guilty

If you believe that you did not break the law or you disagree with what the informant says you did, you must tell the police prosecutor that you plan to plead not guilty. They will hold a summary case conference with you before your case is heard in court. After the conference, if you still wish to plead not guilty tell the magistrate. The magistrate adjourns your case for another day.

You will come back to court for a contested hearing. At this hearing the magistrate listens to evidence from you and the police before making a decision. You should have a defence.

Saying that you did not know you were breaking the law will not be a good enough defence.

If you are pleading not guilty, get legal advice before the contested hearing. Also see our Pleading not guilty fact sheet.

Can I adjourn today's hearing?

You can ask the magistrate for an adjournment if you want to get a private lawyer. Adjournments are hard to get for any other reason. The magistrate may say no.

What are the penalties if I am found guilty?

Demerit points

VicRoads adds demerit points to your licence. The number of demerit points depends on what the road rule is. The magistrate cannot change how many you get.

See our Demerit points fact sheet.

Fines

The magistrate may give you a fine. The number of maximum penalty units varies according to the offence.

One penalty unit is about $145.

Losing your licence

If you plead guilty or are found guilty of an offence under the Road Safety Road Rules 2009 the magistrate may cancel or suspend your licence for a certain amount of time. You should not drive at all during this time. There are no exceptions. For example, you cannot drive to work or to pick up your children. There are no special licences that allow you to drive some of the time. There are serious penalties for driving when you are not supposed to.

Other penalties

The magistrate may also put you on an undertaking to behave well for a certain amount of time.

How does the magistrate decide what penalties to give?

The magistrate looks at:

- how serious your offence is
- if you have been found guilty of similar offences before
- what else is happening in your life.

What else might happen if I am found guilty?

Criminal record

What happens in court goes into your criminal record.

This includes:

- the finding of guilt
- a conviction, if there is one
- penalties.

The court and the police can see your criminal record. Sometimes they can let other people know what is in your criminal record. For example, a criminal record, especially with convictions, may make it harder for you to get some jobs or get visas to some countries.

See our Criminal records fact sheet.

Can I appeal the magistrate's decision?

Yes. If you do not agree with the decision you can appeal to the County Court. You have 28 days to do this. Get legal advice before you decide. You could end up with a higher penalty.

How do I pay a fine?

You can pay the fine at any Magistrates' Court. Go to the court counter and ask the staff for help.

Let the magistrate know if you might have trouble paying the fine. There are options. You can ask the magistrate to:

- make a plan for you to pay bit by bit
- give you community work instead of the fine.

If you do not pay, the court can issue a warrant for your arrest.
