

Family violence is behaviour between family members that causes fear. A family member is anyone you treat as being part of your family, such as your partner.

We all have the right to feel safe and can get legal and other help. Court orders, called intervention orders, can help protect adults and children.

Intervention orders are legal orders about behaviour, with conditions that stop someone doing certain things. These conditions must be followed exactly.

It is a crime to break an order and the police can investigate. Being guilty of breaking an order can mean serious penalties. You can get legal help if an order is broken, or you need an order changed.
